Read the passage below and answer questions 35 to 42.

"Crows are dangerous birds. Be careful of them. Do not throw anything at them or they might attack you," Mrs Lee warned her class when they arrived at West Coast Park.

Some crows were scaring other birds like the mynahs and the pigeons near a dustbin. Martin, Adam and Bok Choon picked up some stones to throw at them.

"Ha! Ha! Look at the crows! They are frightened!" yelled Bok Choon. The boys continued to throw more stones at the crows and they flew away, cawing loudly. Some of them flew to the trees above the dustbin. Some even flew close to the boys and the boys became alarmed. Mrs Lee noticed what was happening so she frowned and gestured to them.

"Come here! Hurry!" Mrs Lee shouted to them.

The boys ran as fast as they could to her. The crows flew in circles above their heads. Finally, they reached the small hut where Mrs Lee and the other pupils were at. She scolded the three of them but the crows could still be heard cawing noisily above the hut. The boys regretted what they had done. They should have listened to her warning about the crows.

"You will see the Discipline Master once we return to school," Mrs Lee told them sternly.

Fortunately, the crows flew away and the pupils could continue with their excursion. Mrs Lee also complained to the authorities about the crows. Several officers were sent to the park to shoot the crows down.

SECTION H: COMPREHENSION (8 marks)

Read the passage below and answer questions 43 to 49.

Tina loves to listen to her grandmother's stories about her childhood. In her grandmother's world, when she was a child, people lived near green meadows and children splashed in clear streams.

"Why wasn't I born then?" Tina asked her grandmother one night. "I want to live where the air's clean and flowers grow!" Tina's grandmother looked at her solemnly and said, "If you want something badly enough, you can make it happen."

The next morning, Tina dashed to school. The polluted air made her throat raw. She hurried past old buildings, filthy parking lots and a deserted park. That afternoon at her chess club meeting, Tina announced, "I'm sick and tired of not being able to play outside! Let's clean up the park across the street."

Some of the children laughed as Tina pulled on rubber gloves and grabbed a big garbage bag. However, Paulina said, "I'm with you! Let's go!" After a few hours, they collected food wrappers, plastic bottles, cans and broken toys. The next day, the chess club leader brought a volley ball and the children had a picnic at the park.

"I'm sorry I laughed at you," said Owen to Tina, with a sandwich in one hand and a package in the other. "Here are some carrot seeds and some for flowers. Maybe we can plant them."

"Great idea!" replied Tina. "And I forgive you." With that, an urban garden was born.

Neighbours planted tomatoes, carrots, daisies and sunflowers. Soon, parents with young children strolled through the park. Tina's throat felt fine at the park since the plants helped clean the air.
