Comprehension MCQ (1 MARK X 5)

Read the passage below and answer the questions that follow it.

If you cringe at the thought of climbing a 1000 metre-high mountain, double amputee Mark Inglis will put you to shame. Last year, the New Zealander became the first man to conquer the 8,848 metres high Mount Everest on two artificial limbs. "When people see me, they see a double amputee. But when I see myself, I see a person who will never get frostbite on my legs again," the 47 – year old half joked.

The competitive cyclist and former search and rescue climber lost his legs 24 years ago due to frostbite while climbing New Zealand's Mount Cook. Trapped in an ice cave with a partner, they were rescued after two weeks but the badly frostbitten legs had to be amputated below the knee.

Still he fulfilled his childhood dream on May 15 last year when he finally reached the summit of Everest along with 10 other climbers. "Climbing Everest is very tough. Just getting up in the middle of the night and putting your boots on can already make you dizzy," he said, "but it is far harder for a double amputee. When you climb, the knee hurts a lot but you just have to go on."

A heart-stopping accident happened during his climb to the summit when he stumbled and a part of his artificial leg snapped off. He simply replaced it with another leg. He laughed it off by commenting that the number one rule is to always carry a spare leg. His jovial demeanour belied the demons, like hallucinations, heart attacks and frostbite that he and other climbers had to battle against to get to the top.

These days, he would not be scaling any more large mountains. Instead, he is actively involved in a charity that he founded, Limbs4All, which aims to help disabled people. "Climbing Everest is just a hill on the journey of life," he said thoughtfully. "It helps you understand yourself better, then gives you power to go on."

About a year ago, I was volunteering at a home for elderly women. On this particular day, as I was preparing to leave for the home, the telephone rang. For a moment I toyed with the idea of not (46) _____ it, but I ran back to the hall anyway.

It was my husband. "Sorry, honey, but I have to work overtime. Guess you'll just have to (47) _____ up Taylor after school. I'll be home as soon as I can." I decided that rather than find a babysitter, I would take Taylor with me to visit with the residents.

With my unexpected companion, we started our rounds. After Taylor and I had visited the third or fourth woman, I noticed that just as we were ready to leave each room, my son would hug each woman and whisper something in her ear to make her smile. Later that evening, during (48) _____, my husband asked how my volunteer job worked out with our son in tow.

"It was actually lots of fun," I said.

"We were quite a pair. Whatever Taylor said to the ladies, it definitely made them happy." As I stood up to clear the dishes, I stopped and glanced across the table at our son.

"What was it that you whispered?"

Looking up at both his (49) _____ and me, his big brown eyes and angelic face, he responded, "I whispered, 'I love you, Grandma, and I wanted you to (50) _____ that you look so beautiful today.'"

I asked Taylor why he did that. He responded, "I just knew it would make them feel good."

COMPREHENSION OPEN-ENDED (2 MARKS X 5)

Read the passage below and answer Questions 51 to 55.

Twenty- one years ago, my husband gave me Sam, a four-week-old schnauzer, to help ease the loss of our daughter, who died shortly after birth. Sam and I developed a very special bond over the next fourteen years.

At one point, my husband and I decided to relocate from our New York apartment to a new home in New Jersey. After we were there awhile, our neighbour, whose cat had recently had kittens, asked us if we would like one. ~~We~~ We were a little apprehensive about Sam's jealousy and how he would handle his turf being invaded. Anyway, we decided to risk it and agreed to take a kitten. We named her Lightning.

At first, Sam and Lightning were very cautious with each other and kept their distance. But slowly, as the days went on, Lightning started following Sam – up the stairs, down the stairs, into the kitchen to watch him eat, into the living room to watch him sleep. As time passed, they became inseparable. When they slept, it was always together. When I played with one, the other one joined in. When I took either one out of the house, the other was always waiting by the door when we returned. That was the way it was for years.

Then without any warning, Sam was diagnosed as having a weak heart. I had no other choice but to have him put down. ~~On~~ The pain of making that decision, however it was nothing compared with what I experienced when I had to leave Sam at the vet and walk into our house alone. This time, there was no Sam for Lightning to greet and no way to explain why she would never see her friend again.

In the days that followed, Lightning seemed heart-broken. She could not tell me in words that she was suffering, but I could see the pain and disappointment in her eyes whenever someone opened the door or whenever she heard a dog bark.

One day as I walked into our living room, I happened to glance down on the floor next to our sofa where we had a sculptured replica of Sam that we had bought a few years before. Lying next to the statue, one arm wrapped around the statue's neck, was Lightning, contently sleeping with her best friend.
