Hearing the frantic shouts of her sister, Tammy, Jill turned towards the river. She was aghast to see an alligator swimming towards Michael. Jill yelled to her brother. She realised that he could not hear her with his head underwater. Michael knew nothing of the danger!

In the kitchen of their home, Sheila, heard the screams and saw the terror on her daughters' faces. She knew something horrible had happened. She ran towards the river. 5

On reaching there, Sheila's heart froze. Closing in on Michael was the biggest alligator she had ever seen.

The alligator moved towards him like a torpedo. Then its jaws opened and it lunged at Michael. As the jaws snapped shut, its lower jaw hooked into the snorkelling mask, ripping it from Michael's face. Fortunately, this allowed the boy's head to slip from its jaws. 10

Michael did not know what had hit him. Suddenly, he was under the surface of the water, on his back. Above him he could see the alligator swimming right over him. Instinctively, he began swimming underwater as fast as he could. 15

Jill's family continued shouting and clapping to distract the creature. They could see the alligator circling in the water but they were not sure what had happened to Michael. A while later, Michael came up for air. His family sighed with relief, grateful that he was still alive.

She woke up to the sound of car horns blaring angrily at one another. She could hear quick paces and shouting too. "Why was everyone so angry this early in the morning?" she wondered.

All this was so different from the familiar sounds of her home. She swallowed hard as a lump formed in her throat. She held back tears as she recalled the sound of wooden carts being pushed leisurely by on the pebbled path outside her window. She pushed the thought aside and told herself firmly, "I must stop looking back. I am not at home anymore."

She looked around her room again. Her aunt and uncle had put her up in their storeroom. "Hope you don't mind staying in this small room," said her uncle apologetically. "It is alright," she said. She was grateful to have a roof over her head.

There were stacks of boxes piled up high to the ceiling and she took down one of the boxes. She opened it and put it next to her mattress. She wanted to know what her relatives kept in these boxes. The box was filled with some pretty souvenirs such as clocks, key chains with pictures of famous places on them and pens. There was also a big, colourful plate that said, "Wish you were here!"

"Wow, Uncle and Aunt had definitely been to many countries and collected many souvenirs," she said to herself.
