Read the passage carefully and answer questions 26 to 30.

Within two days, Dusit was back with reinforcement. He manoeuvred his truck wildly through the dusty path and after the vehicle had been parked haphazardly by the side of the road, the two occupants ambled out. The policeman gave a quick survey of the area and demanded to see the headman.

Eyeing both Dusit and the policeman, Inthorn pursed his lips and hesitantly stepped forward. He had been sawing a teak log to replace some rotten planks on the veranda and his weather-beaten body was drenched. 5

"So you're the mastermind behind the plot to resist paying rent?" the policeman asked.

"There was no plot," Inthorn replied calmly. "No coercion was involved and it was a decision every man made for himself. I personally think you deserve only a tenth of our crop." 10

Dusit turned red and lashed out in obvious fury, "As the headman, you're solely responsible. Since you have adamantly refused to pay the full rent, I'm having you arrested."

Dismayed, Ned pushed his way through the crowd that had gathered and hollered, "You can't arrest him. He hasn't broken any law."

"Of course he has! He didn't pay rent," Dusit yelled. "What do you know about the rent law? I've been collecting rent since before you were weaned! Go back to school, kid, I know when someone has not paid the legal rent." 15

"You don't," Ned said evenly. Then his calm voice resonated through the crowd as he proceeded to tell everyone that the new government was considering passing a new land-rent law, limiting the rent to one-third of the crop. "Until this proposal is either passed or rejected, there is no legal rent. Inthorn has merely adhered to this new law and paid the maximum." 20

Dusit listened open-mouthed with beads of perspiration glistening on his forehead. "How do you know all this?" he mumbled frantically.

"Does that matter?" countered Ned with blatant defiance. "The point is that no law stipulates that a tenant farmer must pay one-half of his crop as rent... and you know it." 25

The policeman and Dusit exchanged a furtive look. Then Dusit suddenly smiled and casually sauntered over to the log that Inthorn had been sawing. "Looks like a good solid log. I could certainly use some in my factories. A fine piece indeed. Teak? You cut it yourself?"

Inthorn nodded warily. ^{suspiciously}

"You got it from the mountains?" Dusit asked pleasantly, his tone belying his intentions. 30

"Wait," Inthorn protested vehemently. "I only cut down one or two logs. The timber company stripped the rest of the mountains."

"Oh, I know that," Dusit laughed. "The timber company has a concession to cut those trees down. Do you?" Casting a glance at the policeman, he muttered, "Now do your job."

The Movement for the Intellectually Disabled in Singapore (MINDS) is a non-profit organisation that provides education and work for the less fortunate citizens in our society. The five schools scattered _____ the island are dedicated to the care of young people who are unable to cope with the demands of ordinary schools. Some _____ these youngsters even need help with simple tasks such as combing their hair. As such, the teachers who work with such children deserve _____ admiration. They not only need patience, but require the gift of being able to break _____ everyday tasks into bite-sized lessons which can be easily absorbed by the children.

_____ a general rule, these teachers work with small groups so that they can devote more attention to each individual. Their main role is to teach life skills to their students _____ that they can take care of themselves in the real world. Hence, their lessons will often take place outside the classroom. For example, the teachers go on simple shopping trips _____ take short rides on buses and trains with the students in order to teach them how to make simple transactions and travel around Singapore on _____ own.

Due to their condition, these children often find it difficult to concentrate on _____ one activity. They may also throw tantrums which will not cease _____ they get their own way, much to the dismay of their parents. Hence, the professionals who work with MINDS are surely a godsend to parents with intellectually disabled children.

Correct each word in bold for spelling and each underlined word for grammar. Write the correct word in the relevant box. (10 marks)

76 Who broke up the fight between the dogs?

77 What lesson did Buck learn from watching the fight?

78 Which word in paragraph 8 has the same meaning as the word "unfortunate"?

79 What did Buck have to do for Francois?

80 Does Buck adapt to new situations easily? Explain your answer in your own words.

Buck's first day on the Dyea beach was like a nightmare. Every hour was filled with shock and surprise. He had been suddenly jerked from the heart of civilization and flung into the heart of things primitive. Buck was fraught with constant anxiety. He did not have peace, nor rest, nor a moment's safety.

All was confusion and action, and every moment life and limb were in peril. There was a need to be constantly alert. These dogs and men were not like those he had known. They were violent savages who knew no law but the law of club and fang. 5

He had never seen dogs fight as these wolfish creatures fought, and his first experience taught him an unforgettable lesson. Curly was the victim. They were camped near the log store, where she, in her friendly way, made advances to a husky dog the size of a full-grown wolf, though not as large as she was. There was no warning, only a leap in like a flash; a metallic clip of teeth, an equally swift leap and Curly's face was ripped open from eye to jaw. 10

It was the wolf manner of fighting, to strike and leap away; but there was more to it than this. Thirty or forty huskies ran to the spot and surrounded the combatants in an intent and silent circle. Buck did not comprehend that silent intentness, or the eager way with which they were licking their chops. 15

Curly rushed her antagonist, who struck again and leaped aside. He met her next rush with his chest, in a peculiar fashion that tumbled her off her feet. She never regained her feet. This was what the other huskies had waited for. They closed in upon her, snarling and yelping, and she was buried, screaming with agony, beneath the bristling mass of bodies. 20

So sudden was it, and so unexpected, that Buck was taken aback. He saw the human, Francois, springing into the mess of dogs with an axe. Three other men with clubs were helping him to scatter them. It did not take long. Two minutes from the time Curly went down, the last of her assailants were clubbed off. But she lay there limp and lifeless in the bloody, trampled snow, almost literally torn to pieces, 25

The scene often came back to Buck to trouble him in his sleep. So that was the way it was, there was no fair play. Once you were brought down, that was the end of you. Well, he would see to it that he never went down.

Before he had recovered from the shock caused by the tragic passing of Curly, he received another shock. Francois fastened upon him an arrangement of straps and buckles. It was a harness, such as he had seen the grooms put on the horses at home. And as he had seen horses work, so he was set to work, hauling Francois on a sled to the forest that fringed the valley, and returning with a load of firewood. 30

Though his dignity was sorely hurt by thus being made a draught animal, he was too wise to rebel. He buckled down with a will and did his best, though it was all new and strange. Francois was stern, demanding instant obedience, and by virtue of his whip receiving instant obedience. Buck learned easily, and under the combined tutelage of his two mates and Francois made remarkable progress. 35
