Once there were two kinds of bees living in a hive. They were the worker bees who gathered pollen from flowers to make honey and the drones who were lazy and did not do anything in the hive.

The worker bees worked together to build a honeycomb in a hollow tree-trunk. However, when the honeycomb was completed, the drones boasted that they had done all the work. This made the worker bees very angry. They called the wasp to decide who was right.

"It is very difficult to say which of you really built the honeycomb. You all look so much alike," said the wasp. "Hmm... I have a plan. Each group will move to a different hive and build a new honeycomb. When both are finished, I will taste the honey. Then I will know who made the fine honeycomb in this hollow tree."

The drones were unhappy. "That's not fair!" they complained. "We don't want to build another honeycomb. We are talking about this honeycomb."

The worker bees, however, did not complain. They readily said, "We will start right away."

The wasp knew then that it was the worker bees who built the honeycomb as they were willing to build a new honeycomb to prove that they could.

Adapted from The Fables of Aesop, "The Bees and The Wasp"

51) What did the bees use to make honey?

52) Where did the bees build their honeycomb?

53) Why was the wasp not able to say who built the honeycomb at first?
