Many years ago, a prince decided to invite one animal to come live with him. All the animals desired this as it would mean plentiful food, soft carpets and other luxurious comforts. (16)

The prince let the animals decide themselves. They argued until Lion suggested that they wrestle to settle the matter. The animals took turns to wrestle each other. It went on until only two were left – Hyena and Cat. Hyena was confident that he would win. Cat was as cool as a ^{cucumber} ~~sun~~cucumber. They wrestled and Hyena kept tossing Cat into the air but she always landed on her feet and charged at Hyena again. (17) (18) (19)

In the end, Hyena was so exhausted that he lay down and slept. So Cat went to live with the prince. She could wander wherever she wanted, and eat all she wanted. In fact, she is still there to this day! (20)

The Singapore National Orchestra

The SNO is an eighty member orchestra that was formed in 1988. It was first suggested to the government by wealthy businessman Soon Ah Teck. Mr Soon felt that it was about time that Singapore had a full-fledged orchestra. Together with well-known celebrities Anna Kee and Ravi Suresh, they helped raise the funds to start the orchestra. The orchestra is fully committed to its mission of bringing classical music to the masses. It was SNO's conductor, Tony Benedict, who started the "Classics for Kids" concert. Tony is a graduate of the London School of Music and is a champion of classical music for the masses.

What our fans have to say -

"I simply adore the SNO!
Conductor Tony Benedict is simply masterfull The way he conducts the orchestra is a joy to behold! Thanks Mom and Dad for taking me!
- Bernard Lee (12 years old)

The SNO musicians are superbly talented and show a real desire to want to share good music with the audience.
My two children simply lapped it up!
- Mr Lim Wei Song (a dedicated music lover)

Mike pulled his diving mask down over his face and let the icy waters close over his wetsuit. Snorkelling was his favourite way of relaxing. As his four team-mates snorkelled in the shallow waters, Mike finned his way to 40 metres offshore. He relished the feeling of oneness with nature. He scanned the ocean bed to familiarise himself with the depth of the bay so that he might swim with the whales when they came to breed in winter. Large sharks were unknown here and while the temperature of the water could be as low as six degrees Celsius, his wetsuit was thick enough to keep out the cold. 5

After half an hour, Mike had seen enough. Time to go in. He stopped kicking and let himself drift. Thud! A huge weight slammed into his right shoulder. Mike was flung forward, gasping for breath. Must be a big bull sea lion, he thought. An instant later, he was hurled upwards and held waist-high above the water. Then Mike looked down. Clamped around his right arm were the 80-centimetre-wide jaws of a huge shark. 10

Instinctively, Mike swung his left arm around and punched furiously at the creature's pointed snout. I must warn the others, he thought. "Shark!" he screamed. However, his cry became a silent stream of bubbles as the monster dragged him under. His teammates were snorkelling 13 metres nearer the shore. Then came a faint, muffled cry. The swimmers surfaced and scanned the horizon. Nothing. 15 20

Suddenly, there was an explosion of spray. Mike erupted from the sea, yelling and fighting ferociously. His teammates froze at the sight of the creature that held him. The great white paused for a moment, its head out of the water. Then chillingly, it opened and closed its mouth around Mike.

Think, Daniella urged herself. There must be something you can do. She screamed to the others. "Has anyone got a dive knife?" However, she knew it would be powerless to help. The great white is the ocean's most fearsome creature: 590 kilos of muscle and against which a diver's knife would be useless. Judging by the monster's head, it was at least four metres long. Daniella watched helplessly as the shark pulled Mike beneath the waves. 25 30

As he went under, Mike realised that death was only seconds away. He raised his knees, then gave a powerful kick to the pale underside of the monster's mouth. He kicked again and again, tugging desperately at his trapped arm. The shark shook him with its teeth grounding deep into his flesh, meshing like shears. Mike kicked again. Suddenly, he felt a hard wrench and he rolled clear. 35

Instantly, Mike rocketed upwards. As his head broke the water's surface, he sucked in air and kicked frantically for the shore. As he ploughed through the water, his body reacted strangely. He looked down at his right arm. It was gone! There was nothing below his elbow except a shredded stump that pumped spurts of bright red blood into the sea. 40

Mike knew that his only hope lay in getting to his team-mates before he bled to death. He had told them before, "Out here we have to look out for each other. There's nobody else."

Now that would be put to the test.
